SAN FRANCISCO (MarketWatch) -- Research In Motion Ltd. rimm was upgraded to a buy rating from underperform by Charter Equity on Tuesday morning. In a note to clients, analyst Ed Snyder said the "curb appeal" of the new BlackBerry 10 operating system expected to launch in the coming weeks "could help investors look past Network pricing issues." He cited his "preliminary review" of the new operating system, adding that with "a compelling user interface, 70K applications and RIM's hallmark QWERTY keyboard included in the SKU line-up, we believe the BB10 platform will appeal to a healthy percentage of the company's 80K subscribers, driving an upgrade cycle." RIM shares were last trading down 4.2% at $14.30 after having jumped more than 10% in the previous session.
